DESCRIPTION

Objectives

This call aims to advance the understanding and prediction of the health of ecosystems and wild species, and their impacts on human health, using a One Health approach. The objective is to foster transdisciplinary research communities that can assess and predict ecosystem and wildlife health in the face of existing and emerging stressors, such as climate change and pollution, and to inform policy and governance for comprehensive One Health strategies. The call supports the implementation of the EU Green Deal, the EU biodiversity strategy for 2030, and international biodiversity frameworks. Eligible applicants include consortia of legal entities from EU Member States and Associated Countries, as defined in the Horizon Europe rules, with a strong emphasis on integrating social sciences and humanities to enhance societal impact.
